Preface

Holland Tunnel Gallery stands for the long-term, ongoing relationship between American and Dutch art. It is a great pleasure to write a few words in this book and congratulate Paulien Lethen with what she has achieved since 1997. She has created a place with a social function, not only interesting for the art elite, but also inviting to families from the neighborhood who may enter a gallery for the first time. She offers a stage to numerous artists with great dedication, not seeing herself as a gallery director, but as one of the artists.

No lack of good ideas! Her brilliant concept to buy a second garden shed and put it on wheels to provide an art experience for schools and seniors centers was never realized. But quite a few other plans were carried out, like the summer extension of Holland Tunnel Gallery on the Greek island of Paros, her former residence, and Stairmasters, the unconventional exhibition space adjacent to Holland Tunnel Gallery, where you climb four flights of stairs while enjoying art on the walls. Not to mention her hospitable Gallery Guesthouse and elegant Williamsburg Dinner Club.

Paulien Lethen is the personification of the Dutch mentality as we want to convey that now. She has made all the difference with art and culture, in an unorthodox spot and unusual setting. Paulien is a Williamsburg pioneer with a revolutionary and visionary eye. Look at Williamsburg now!

On the occasion of a Williamsburg open studio weekend, Paulien Lethen organized a one time exhibition with artists from the neighborhood and The Netherlands in her newly installed garden shed. This turned out to be the first exhibition of many to follow. The photo of artist Bix Lye (in yellow rain suit) illustrates the size of the

The exhibition Orange on the occasion of Queen's Day, a Dutch national holiday on April 30th, featured art works in the national color of The Netherlands and matching accessories like an orange chair and a bowl with goldfish. Outside the gallery there was a traditional Queen's Day 'free market' with live music.
